Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Training Departments in State Normal Schools, in the United States In common with other forms of vocational education the preparation of teachers requires a curriculum made up of subjects of study which will contribute to the development of the desired skill, and for the exercise, under supervision, of the skill in question. Vocations differ among themselves in the definiteness of the skill involved. In some vocations the conditions under which the skill is to be exercised are relatively fixed and can be so definitely foreseen that the skill can be made effective by being highly mechanized through training. In others the conditions to be met are so variable, so impossible to foresee in detail, that the skill in a large measure cannot be mechanized and the preparation for the vocation consists not in definite training but in education which is designed to prepare the individual to meet and to deal intelligently with variable conditions in the field of his vocation. The vocations commonly called professions involve some situations which may be prepared for in the first...
