Excerpt: . . . to the good Engineer of the future. Had you been here on Stadium Day, Old Grad, you would have seen sights to fill your heart with joy and gladness. You would have seen things that would make you surer than ever that K. U. hasnt lost all the old pep and fight that our Alumni are so wont to tell us about with pride. At seven-thirty oclock the bugles blew all over the hill. At eight-thirty every loyal son of Kansas, every one of the oldtime thundering thousand and his brother were down at McCook Field tearing at the bleachers. At nine-thirty an old-time paddling squad toured the hill and searched every house for delinquents. Every man who was found performed the proverbial stunt of racing madly between two rows of hard-boiled paddles and thence down to McCook Field for fear of reptition of the punishment, Then came a freshman who was his own boss and who would not bow to the dictates of his upperclassmen. He didnt have to work, and very forcibly proved his arguments with the point of a gun. Later on in the afternoon, when he finally became fully conscious, a sorer but wiser young man, some one told him that he had been rudely dragged out of the Evereat Cafe when he was just about to sit down to a bounteous repast with a charming maiden, and from there half carried and half dragged to the usual receptor of...
