Now, dear reader, I do not mean to say that this little unpretending book is so good that it needs no preface; but I do think it is quite necessary to explain my reasons for publishing some selections from a diary written during my stay in Victoria. It was as much to please those who are dear to me, as my own desire to place before such as are about to emigrate a true picture of the colony which has been my home for many years, and which I do not think is sufficiently appreciated in the mother country.
